ANCESTORS

If you could see your ancestors
 All standing in a row,
Would you be proud of them or not,
 Or don't you really know?
Some strange discoveries are made
 In climbing family trees,
And some of them, you know, do not Particularly please.

If you could see your ancestors
 All standing in a row,
There might be some of them, perhaps,
 You wouldn't care to know.
But here's another question, which Requires a different view—
If you could meet your ancestors,
 Would they be proud of you?

Somerville Journal.

INTRODUCTION.

The compiler of this genealogy has always desired to know more of his ancestors, and this book is the result.

There have been written several histories of different places, giving some genealogical records, and the writer has taken advantage of all data he could find in these with reference to the Does, and has made some changes where he has found some of the historians did not trace back far enough to prove their records. He wishes to thank all the people who have generously contributed their records and recollections toward completing this genealogy.

The author of this work wishes to disclaim any responsibility for errors of fact and arrangement, for some who have been listless or careless on this subject may criticise the book because the complete record of their family is not given, when the compiler would have been only too glad to have had more detailed information. He has searched New England Historical and Genealogical Registers, and all records of towns and cities where records were kept in early days, also all probate records and records of deeds, historical society records, both printed and in manuscript, the records of the New Hampshire legislature, and received the balance of his information from old Bibles owned by private individuals and people now living, and from tombstones from many cemeteries visited.

He trusts that if anyone belonging in this genealogy has been omitted they may be able to trace their family with the aid of this book. There may be mistakes, as the writer finds that dates and names given by different members of a family sometimes vary, and dates on tombstones do not agree with Bible records of births. Every proof possible has been obtained, still the writer realizes there is some data missing.

The manuscript was carefully arranged according to approved methods of genealogical work. John Doe having been the first son, is given precedence, and his descendants follow in generations. The descendants of Sampson Doe also are given in generations, so that by referring to the different indices the name on record can be found.

The author will be pleased to receive any information in regard to corrections and additions, and at some future time a more complete work can be printed.

The indices are:

Index No. 1—Christian Names of Does.

Index No. 2—Surnames of others than Doe.

It is important to remember that in the case of the head of a family the name will be in heavy type, while the names of his descendants appear in small type.

The usual genealogical abbreviations appear: B for born, M for married, D for died, S P for sine prole (without issue), Dau. for daughter, Ch. for child or children, Bapt. for baptized, Est. for estate and Adm. for administered.

DOE GENEALOGY.

The name Doe is of Norman-French origin. Barber's "English Family Names," gives Doe as Danish, and as the Danes made frequent incursions into Normandy it is not impossible that our early ancestors were of Danish extraction. In "Norman People," we find mention of Raherius D'O, 1198, and in "Memoirs of the Antiquarian Society of Normandy," mention is made of Robert D'O and the castle and manor of D'O. In the Hundred Rolls, dated 1273, we find John le Doe and his father, William le Do. In "Dictionary of Names," by Larchy, D'O is given as the name of a Breton saint, and was originally the name of a Norman town. Later records show that families bearing the name of Doe were located in England and Ireland, as in the Irish Parliament of James II in 1689 was Lewis Doe of Dungannon, representing County Tyrone, and among King James's officers in 1690 was a Louis Doe, Receiver General. In 1635, Charles Doe was Lord High Sheriff of London, England, and was granted a coat of arms. Irish records show that a Joshua Doe purchased one of the forfeited estates in Ireland in 1702-1703.

A careful research of some of the most eminent authorities on names proves that Doe is a different name than Dow, although many have thought it was the same family name, but spelled differently. This is not the case, for Dow is of Scottish origin, while Doe is not. In the examination of records while collecting material for this work we have in a few instances found the name spelled Dow, but think this was due to carelessness on the part of the person recording the name.

There are three coats of arms belonging to Does, but we have been unable to connect any of these with the branch of the Doe family recorded in this work. A coat of arms is inherited the same as property, and can be legally used only by the descendants of that line of a family, although little regard to this is observed in America.

Our first ancestor in New England, of whom we have a record, was Nicholas Doe, probably from England, although the writer found a great number of families who have had handed down to them the tradition that the Does are of Scotch ancestry. This is not the case, for the most painstaking research of works on the origin of names does not in a single instance give the name to be of Scottish origin.

The first records that we can find of Nicholas Doe is where he witnessed the will of Thomas Walford at Portsmouth, N. H., Nov. 15, 1666. The following is copied from the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, Vol. VI, p. 35.

"Nicholas Doe (1) was received as an inhabitant in 1668, was taxed at Oyster River from 1666 to 1672." (Oyster River is now Durham, N. H.)

February 14, 1668, Nicholas Doe purchased of Thomas Mounsell property which was deeded to the latter by John Martin and Hester on Sept. 20, 1667, and described as follows:

"His dwelling house now standing in Luberland in ye Great Bay together with 40 acres of upland granted him by the town of Dover, bounded on one side by Richard York from ye high water side, and on ye other by ye land of John Goddard. Also two acres of salt meadow adjoining sd. uplands, and 12 acres of fresh meadow about three-fourths of a mile from the house. Also six score acres of upland lying by the side of Lamprill River, near ye mill, with all rights and privileges, etc."

We find in Dover, N. H., records that Nicholas Doe was received as an inhabitant of Dover the 21st, 7 mo., 1668, with no rights of pasture on the common, the town not being of a capacity to give accommodations as heretofore. He witnessed the will of Richard York of Dover in 1672. He was grand jurymen in 1679 and 1680 at court in Dover, N. H., and took oath of office of constable of Dover in 1682.

Where Nicholas Doe was born, or resided prior to his appearance at Oyster River, N. H., in 1666, the writer has been unable to determine, but from some of the family legends one is led to believe that possibly he was a native of England, as one of the family, who is past ninety years of age had heard the story of the three brothers, and claimed his grandfather had told him that Nicholas Doe, his first ancestor, came from London, England, and that Nicholas' father had owned a whole street called Blue Street, because all of the houses were of a blue color. Nothing is yet known of his history in England, but there were many others who settled at Oyster River (Dover), whose descendants have not been able to connect with families of the same name in England.

A record was kept of those families who left England, and before leaving they were requested to take the oath of loyalty to the English Crown and promise conformity to the Established Church. As many desired to avoid this enforced allegiance and to settle in the land of their adoption free to follow their own religious inclinations, a great many of them left secretly and made their way as sailors, etc. It is possible that Nicholas Doe left England in this manner.

A large number of English church records have been examined, but we have failed to find the birth of Nicholas Doe, or the date of his marriage to Martha Thomas. We do find that there were a number of Does who landed in Virginia as early as 1635, and their marriages were followed to see if Nicholas Doe was born in Virginia, as a great many people came from Virginia to the Isles of Shoals fishing, and while it is possible he might have been one of these fishermen there is no tangible proof to this effect. We do find that "13 June, 1673, William Doe, for forty pounds conveys to Andrew Dymond and Henry Maine, all of Isle of Shoals, his house and lands in Ipswich." (Ipswich Records at Salem, Vol. I, page 267.) What part of the Isles of Shoals this means it is difficult to determine, as there are about eighteen islands which comprise the Isles of Shoals, and this might mean one of them. The writer finds one more Doe in the early days, and that was Edward Doe, who had a suit in Boston in 1682 over a cargo.

This makes three Does in the Colonies in the period between 1666-1682, and it would seem to some that they were three brothers, as we often hear; the writer was told by his father when a boy that three brothers came to America, and this tale is told in almost every family, but it is impossible to connect them with Nicholas Doe, as we have never found a descendant from anyone of them except Nicholas.

The "Genealogical Dictionary," which gives account of first settlers who came to America before May 16, 1692, shows three generations. It also mentions Nicholas Doe and wife Martha.

In "Old New Hampshire Families," New England Historical and Genealogical Register, Vol. 10, page 115, reference is made to Nicholas Doe and wife Martha and three children.

FIRST GENERATION.

Nicholas Doe (I), b. about 1631; m. Martha Thomas. He d. Oyster River, N. H., 1691.

Children:

- I. John, b. Aug. 25, 1669; m. Elizabeth
- II. Sampson, b. Apr. 1, 1670; m. Ist, Temperance———.
- III. Elizabeth, b. Feb. 7, 1673. No further record.*

*NOTE—In the probate record of the settlement of the estate of Nicholas Doe, Elizabeth is not mentioned, but reference is made to the fact that Sampson had purchased his sister Mary's share in the estate. Whether the sister referred to was Elizabeth, or another sister born later, it is impossible to state, as we were unable to find any record of the death of Elizabeth, or of the birth of a fourth child to Nicholas and Martha (Thomas) Doe.

Volume I, New Hampshire Provincial Papers.

May 19, 1669, Nicholas Doe signed a petition to the General Court of Massachusetts to have his section set off from Dover, "taking in consideration the intolerable inconvenience of our travail manie miles, part by land and part by water, many times by both, to the publick worship of God." * * * * * "Nor are our affairs so well provided for as if we were a township of ourselves, we being in all 220 souls, near 50 families, 70 & odd soldiers, etc." Nicholas Doe and thirty-seven others signed this petition. This section was called Oyster River, Dover being Dover Neck then.

New Hampshire Provincial Deeds, VI-Page 167.

Nicholas Doe aged about 50, deposed 7 June, 1682, that "sixteen years since I was desired by Elizabeth alias Graves, for to devide a parcel of Planting ground which was left by her husband, Richard York to her son John York and herself, into thirds, which land, I, with Benjamin Matthews, did devide."

On the 10th of the first month, 1673-4, the bounds between Nicholas Doe and John Goddard were fixed as follows: "From high water mark at the usuall landing place A high'waye of fower poele wid up to John Godder his land at the marsh on the one side and soe to the Corner of John Godders orchard on the west and that fence of the orchard to stand and soe to a heape of Rocks on the west of the heigh waye and Nicholass Does garden on the Est of the high waye and all the Newe fence att Does garden to be wholley taken a way and from the corner of Does garden in to the woods upon the west sid of the hill this high way to goe into the woods of fower pole wide upon a North and to be west line and is the bounds of the land betwixt John Godderd and Nichlos Doe." (Durham (N. H.) History.)

From old deeds we learn that John Smith sold to Nicholas Doe two small islands containing about six acres, "be it more or less," and Sampson Doe, son of Nicholas, sold the same to Joseph Chesley 27 March, 1707.

Children:

- I. Stephen of Parsonsfield, Me., who m. Mary Jane——.

James Doe 5, (John 4, John 3, John 2, Nicholas 1), b. Alton, N. H., about 1790; m. Nov. 12, 1812, Lydia Kent of Wolfeboro, N. H. In 1825 James and Lydia Doe with their children, the eldest a lad of thirteen and the youngest but an infant, emigrated to Canada, settling in Granby, Shefford County, P. Q. The trip was made on horseback, and they carried only such household goods as could be packed on the backs of horses. At that time there was but one house where the flourishing town of Granby now stands, and that was of the blockhouse type, and was occupied by the families of John Horner and Squire Frost. The Doe family went back about three miles into the forest and built a log cabin and cleared land for a farm, having taken 200 acres of wild timberland. To do their trading they followed a blazed trail to St. Pie, where the nearest store was located. They manufactured pearlsh and salts, carrying these products by ox team part way to Montreal, where French carters were hired to continue the trip and bring back goods of different kinds. The compiler of this genealogy had the pleasure of passing a few days in Canada during February, 1916, at the home of Horace Lyman Doe, grandson of James Doe, and also visited Mrs. Elvira Doe Smith, daughter of James, who was born in 1819. Mrs. Smith has a wonderful memory and told many interesting anecdotes of life and hardships in the early days, of carding, spinning and weaving, etc. She was also able to recall the names of all her uncles and aunts, some of whom had visited them in Canada during her childhood, and although 90 years had passed she told of things which occurred at Alton, N. H., when she was a child.

From this hardy pioneer and his wife about thirty families descended. Some have returned to the States and some occupy the same farm cleared 90 years ago. Among their possessions is a grandfather's clock which was owned by James Doe, and brought from Alton, N. H. This clock was formerly in the Kent family.

She was a widow and had six children. He resided in Concord, Me. Moved to Dover, N. H., in 1851, then to Alexandria, and later to Orange, N. H. Josiah Doe was noted for his great strength and power of endurance. It is said that while living in Alexandria he went into a store in the town of Grafton to make some purchases. While thus engaged, two young men considerably under the influence of liquor started to impose on him, whereupon he calmly picked one of them up bodily and dashed him through a glass door. Mr. Doe then pulled out his wallet and asked the merchant what the damage would amount to, but was assured that there was no expense connected with the breaking of the door, as the merchant considered that he had done a good deed in teaching the young rowdy not to impose on an elderly man. He d. in Orange, N. H., in 1874.

NOTE.—The graves of this family are to be found in the family burial place on the Doe homestead in Durham, where four generations of Does are buried. This plot also contains several graves marked by rough slabs of stone without inscriptions. These stones must have been placed on the graves prior to 1800, and it is safe to assume that they mark the resting place of Does of earlier generations. Olinthus Doe was the last of this branch of the family, and under the terms of his will, dated May 18, 1898, the farm was left to the Town of Durham for the benefit of the schools. The house was burned several years ago, but the ruins of the massive chimney are still standing (1916). The burial plot was located a short distance from the house, and the town has placed an iron fence around the enclosure. A comparison of the location of this farm with the original survey of the town makes it apparent that the land was once a part of the tract owned by John Doe (2). The moat described in the account of the settlement of John Doe's estate, 1742, is seen in the rear of the ruins of the house.

SIXTH GENERATION.

William Nealley Doe 6, (Jacob 5, Jeremiah 4, Daniel 3, John 2, Nicholas 1), b. Deerfield, N. State of N. H.

May 10, 1802.

John Doe, Gentleman, having requested leave to resign this Commission, his Resignation is accepted.

J. T. GILMAN,

Capt. General.

An amusing anecdote concerning Mrs. Mary Chase, daughter of Capt. John Doe, is copied from an old paper:

“One day hearing a commotion among her geese, she sallied forth from the door of the farmhouse in quest of the agent of the disturbance, and quickly saw a full grown fox with his teeth firmly set in the neck of a large goose and making an effort to swing his anticipated dinner over his shoulder, preparatory to leaving for the forest. She immediately seized him by the ears with either hand and notwithstanding his fierce struggles carried him in triumph to a back room in the house and closed the door to keep him until her husband's arrival from a neighbor's. In this room was an old-fashioned fireplace with a broad projection. After his foxship had been domiciled for a while, she peeped through an aperture in the door and saw him sitting upon the shelf or projection aforementioned, as if preparing to escape through a glass in the door. She had no notion of losing him, so incasing her hands in some thick leather gloves, entered the room and seizing the fox carried him to her bedroom where she turned a bushel measure upside down with Mr. Fox underneath. She then lifted one leg of her bedstead and placed it on the measure and secured him until her husband's return."

Aug. 14, 1831; m. 2nd, Lydia Ann Roberts, Jan. 12, 1834. The following is copied from The Fostoria Weekly News, Fostoria, Ohio: "He belonged to a family of thirteen children. He chanced to have his birth at a time, and of parents, who thought it no disgrace to have a large family, but like the ancient Hebrews deemed it an honor to have a numerous posterity. Connected with his childhood and youth there were no remarkable incidents or events. His father was a thrifty farmer, and Daniel, in common with the other sons, was trained upon the farm; here he acquired habits of industry, economy and promptness. These excellent traits characterized his life. Inheriting a somewhat delicate constitution, his parents, not considering him strong enough to work on the farm, determined to give him an education. It was customary at that period to send the weakly members of the family to college. Customs change and the strongest go now. Accordingly, Daniel was fitted up in his plain home-spun clothes, and sent away to Haverhill, N. H. He continued attending school, working on the farm, and teaching, until at length he was prepared and entered the medical department at Dartmouth College, where he graduated, Dec. 6, 1827, in a class of thirty-one with the highest honors of his class. He commenced practice of medicine at Bridgewater, N. H., and continued it at Rumney and Meredith Center, N. H., New York City, Peru and Fremont, Ohio. He came with his family to Fostoria about fifteen years ago (1854) but has followed his profession very little since that on account of impaired health. Dr. Doe stood high as a physician, and was a successful practitioner. That he possessed marked excellencies of character, none who knew him can deny." He d. Jan. 26, 1869, in Fostoria, O.

The following is copied from the Brown University Alumni Monthly, issue of January, 1915:

“Edgar John Doe, '64, died Dec. 29, at his home in Providence, after an illness of some duration. He was born in Parsonsfield, Me., in 1842. He entered Brown in 1860 as a candidate for the degree of A. B. He served as a private in Co. K, 10th Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, May 26 to Sept. 1, 1862. Returning to Washington he assisted Col. Turner of a New York Cavalry regiment and Lt. Col. Raymond of a New York infantry regiment (both members of the Underground Railroad) in raising the First Regiment, District of Columbia Colored Troops it being President Lincoln's intention to form a brigade from the colored refugees there assembled, of which Col. Turner should have command and Doe be given a position on his staff. But the colonelcy of that regiment was given to a person unknown to the men and instantly all recruiting stopped among the blacks of the District. Through Senator Wilson, Doe secured an appointment as Hospital Steward in the Regular Army and served as such until the War of the Rebellion was well passed. He performed duty at the Surgeon General's Office in Washington; at the office of the Medical Director of the Northern Department, at Columbus, O.; also from some time in 1864 at the Marine Hospital in the latter city, then in charge of an Acting Assistant Surgeon, but Doe himself being practically the executive officer. During this last period he studied medicine and attended a course of lectures at the Medical College of Ohio, but finally relinquished his purpose. He came to Providence in 1865, and during most of the time he was engaged in the coal and wood business. He was president of the Doe & Little Company, and of the Carbon, Coal & Coke Company. He held no public office, but was a devoted member of the Stewart Street Baptist Church, in which he served both as clerk and deacon and as the teacher of an adult Bible class in its Sunday School. He did not graduate, but in 1903, by special vote, he received the degree of A. B. from the University. He is survived by a widow, two sons, Charles E. and Arthur E., of Providence, and a daughter, Mrs. Alice Roberts of Savannah, Ga."

REV. FRANKLIN B. DOE
B. Dec. 5, 1827

EIGHTH GENERATION.

Rev. Franklin Bradley Doe 8, (Jacob 7, William 6, Jacob 5, Jeremiah 4, Daniel 3, John 2, Nicholas 1), b. Highgate, Vt., Dec. 10, 1824. Prepared for college at Lowell, Mass. Graduated from Amherst College, 1851; Bangor Theological Seminary 1854. M. 1854, Mary A. Beecroft of Bangor, Me., who d. April, 1900. He had pastorates at Lancaster, Mass., and Appleton, Wis., 1858-68. Later was superintendent of American Home Missionary Society for Wisconsin 1868 to 1883; superintendent for Missouri, Arkansas, Indian Territory in 1883; financial agent for Ripon College 1899. He d. May 23, 1901, Ashland, Wis. The following tribute to his life and work is copied from the Ashland Daily Press:

The funeral services of Rev. F. B. Doe took place in the Congregational church of this city, in charge of the pastor, Rev. A. G. Beach. In accordance with the request of the deceased, his oldtime friend, Rev. H. A. Miner of Madison, made an address; also Rev. H. A. Carter of Beloit, secretary of Wisconsin Home Missionary society. The favorite hymns, "Rock of Ages, Cleft For Me," "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," were sung.

Rev. Mr. Doe visited this city years before any railroad reached Ashland. He aided in the organization of the First Congregational church during the 70's, and secured for pastor, Rev. Will Safford, whose early death was greatly lamented. Mr. Doe was in fact, one of the oldest residents of this city, and his departure will be greatly lamented by our citizens.

It was in Swanton, Vermont, December 5, 1827, that Franklin Bradley Doe first saw the light. Of a sturdy New England parentage, trained to habits of industry on the farm, with only a common school education, but with a self reliant, ambitious spirit he set his heart upon something better. He taught school winters, receiving $9 per month for his first term, and "boarded 'round," and worked summers. Becoming an expert lather he commanded even better wages at this than teaching. For three years his home was in Lowell, Massachusetts, where he became a member of the Zohn street Congregational church, and for two years acted as sexton, busily filling his purse preparing for college.

In 1847 he entered Amherst college, graduating in 1851, having taken rank much above the average in scholarship. From thence he went to Bangor Theological seminary, graduating in August, 1854, having taught in the meantime an academy at Litchfield, Maine, for nine months.

At Bangor he met Miss Mary A. Beecroft, who became his life companion, being married by Rev. George Shepard, D. D., of the seminary, on the day of his graduation, and immediately entered upon a four years' pastorate at Lancaster, Massachusetts. The pastorate of the Appleton, Wisconsin, Congregational church becoming vacant, Mr. Doe was invited to fill the same, entering upon his western field of labor in the fall of 1858 with a church of sixty members, which in ten years, under his leadership, reached a membership of over 300, requiring the enlargements of the church edifice to accomodate the growing congregations.

In 1868 Mr. Doe was appointed to the superintendency of home missions for northern Wisconsin reaching as far south as the Milwaukee & LaCrosse railway. After ten years he had charge of the entire state for five years with H. A. Miner, who had been in charge of the southern part of the state as his associate in general missionary work. The next ten years Mr. Doe spent as missionary superintendent for Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Indian Territory and Missouri, with headquarters at Dallas and later at St. Louis. This proved a very arduous work by reason of the long distances to be traveled and the fact that Congregationalism for the most part was an exotic in that part of our country. But his work was crowned with success.

In 1893, after completing twenty-five years of home missionary service he retired to his home in this city, where he has since resided. But he has not been idle. He has served as temporary supplies from a few weeks to a year in Clintonville, West Salem, Eau Claire, Bruce, Apollonia, Amery and other points, thus rounding out a life of splendid service.

He loved Wisconsin, its schools, its churches, its homes, that were ever open to welcome his coming. His hand and his voice were readily interested in every good work.

He leaves a son Frank, residing in St. Paul, Minn., and two daughters, Mrs. Edwin H. Ellis and Mrs. L. A. Warner, both of this city.

Nelson R. Doe 8, (Thomas Jefferson 7, William 6, Jacob 5, Jeremiah 4, Daniel 3, John 2, Nicholas 1), b. Newbury, Vt., Feb. 16, 1836; m. Sept. 18, 1860, Ellen Aurelia Chamberlain of Bradford, Vt. His boyhood was spent in So. Newbury, but in 1855 he began to carve out his own career by going to Boston, where he worked for a Mr. Hunter, in Faneuil Hall Market, for five years. During these years he laid the foundation for his future business career by learning the fundamental principles of the produce business. In 1860 he formed a partnership to conduct a produce business, the firm being known as Doe & Sargent. The partnership was dissolved three years later and Mr. Doe came to Bradford and spent the year 1864. The following year Mr. Doe went to New York, and forty years of business life in the wholesale fruit business was begun with the establishing of the firm of Farnham & Doe. This combination lasted two years when the firm of Dudley, Clapp & Doe was formed. For twenty-five years this firm did an enormous business in wholesaling fruit much of it being shipped to Europe. In 1892 he associated himself with Porter Brothers Co., being manager of the New York branch. During the next thirteen years he was in charge of the New York end of the wholesale auction of fruits for this Co. In 1905 he retired from active business and returned to Bradford to spend the last years of life free from the cares of metropolitan life. Mr. Doe was large in body and in mind. His active life was among the scenes of big business and big things and his thinking was colored by his environments. He took an active interest in affairs, especially National business affairs, and his large acquaintance and wide reading, made his judgment upon such matters valuable. His genial nature and kindly disposition assured him a host of friends, and his journey in life was always cheered by those whom he counted friends. His years of retirement were made happy by the attention which his sons paid to the gratification of his wishes and he was never allowed to feel that he was becoming an old man because there was always something at hand to interest him. He d. at Bradford, Vt. Sept. 7, 1915.

From "Landmarks of Ancient Dover," by Mary P. Thompson, published in 1892, we learn that Doe's Neck, now in Newmarket, but once a part of ancient Dover, was so-called from Sampson Doe of Lubberland, to whom Richard Waldron conveyed March 22, 1790, all the land between Lamprell River and Goddard's Creek in the township of Dover, formerly granted to Peter Coffin of Exeter.

Capt. Nathaniel Doe (3), was captain of a company in Col. Nathaniel Meserve's regiment on the expedition against the French and Indians at Crown Point, Lake Champlain, in 1754.

(French and Indian War Records, Vol. 94, p. 537.) Received pay as per records of House of Representatives, from which the following is copied:

“New Hampshire Journals of House of Representatives,
Vol. 5, page 209.

Voted: That Capt. Nathaniel Doe's muster roll for fifty men employed at Crown Point Expedition in Col. Nath'l Meserve's regt. be allowed. Amount for services £1167-17-4, dated Jan. 7, 1757.

50 men
8 deserters
<hr style="width: 20%; margin: 0 auto;"/>
42 men”

He was also owner of a share in the sloop Speedwell which was taken or hired by the Government to go to France with French prisoners, and he with his brother-in-law petitioned the State to pay for same, as per copy of House Records below:

POST MERIDIEN.

Met according to adjournment.

Sampson Sheaf Esq. brought from the Council the Petition of James Stoodly, Jun (a) & Nathl Doe.

Journal of Council and Assistants, Jan. 31, 1753.

The petition of James Stoodly, Jun for himself and Partners praying a further consideration from Loss sustained in the affair of the Sloop Speedwell hired by this Government to go to France with French Prisoners & read & ordered to be sent Down to the House Saturday May 4, 1754

Upon reading and considering the Petition of James Studley Jun & Nathl Doe Voted that there be allowed and paid out of the money that is or may be in the Treasury unto the Petitioners the sum of Thirty Pounds new Ten in full for all or any demands (P. 460) they may have on this Provence on acct of the vessil mentioned in sd Petition or anything relative thereto. Sent up by Mr. Knight (Concurred)

(Here the Editor tells us by concurred in brackets that in the record of the Council he finds the Council concurred and presumably Stoodly and Doe accepted the settlement.)

The following is copied from "Landmarks of Ancient Dover," by Mary P. Thompson, published in 1892:

"Nathaniel Doe, April 19, 1745, conveyed to Ralph Cross of Newbury, half the farm called Doe's Neck, about one hundred and twenty acres, with dwelling house and barn southward of house land extending from barn to Lamprell River, then east on said river to the Great Bay, and by said Bay northerly to a fence northward of Martin's Layn, so-called, then up Goddard's Creek to a rock eastward of Burch Point near the place where people commonly pass over."

Capt. Nathaniel Doe subscribed £200 on the Provincial Loan of 25,000 Dec. 1, 1743, and his brother Samuel subscribed £100. (Prov. Records, Book XVIII, page 192). We find where he and his wife sold their property in Durham, also in Berwick, Maine, in 1757, and they probably left there and went with their children into the wilderness of Maine. The first authentic record we can find after that is where he purchased land of Samuel Scott, in 1767, recorded in Wiscasset, Lincoln county. At that time Lincoln county included what is now Kennebec county and several other counties. By these records we find he was the first man by the name of Doe to settle in Maine, as the only other mention we find of the name of Doe prior to this, is the name of his uncle John as witness on a deed in York County, and this deed was probably signed at Oyster River, N. H.

We also find where he deeded land in 1769-70 and 1772 to his son Nathaniel Doe, Jr., the deed reading as follows: "I, Nathaniel Doe, Gentleman of Kennebec River, County of Lincoln and Province of Massachusetts Bay in New England, (and not of any town,) which goes to prove that after he left Berwick with his family he must have settled in the wilderness on Kennebec River where Vassalboro and Sydney towns are, as we find as late as 1805 he deeded land in Vassalboro to his sons, and we find in Vassalboro records that Nathaniel Doe, Jr., Dudley Doe, James Doe and Sampson Doe were committee on valuation of lists of polls in 1790.

ing a conscientious regard for justice and right. As a teacher he sought to impress his pupils with the necessity of a sure educational foundation as a means of future success, and his ability as an instructor often received public recognition. He was a member of the Democratic party, but the minority of his party always barred his election when a candidate for official honors. He was a member of the Board of Agriculture of the State for three years, and at one time was inspector of customs for the port of Saco. Mr. Doe was familiarly known as Capt. Doe, he having been at one time captain of the Saco Guards.

Col. Bartlett Doe 5, (Deacon John 4, Nicholas 3, Sampson 2, Nicholas 1), b. Aug. 30, 1785, at Parsonsfield, Me.; m. 1st, Mary, dau. of Sir. John Sanborn, Nov. 29, 1810; m. 2nd, Lydia Moulton, dau. of Rev. Wentworth Lord of Ossipee, N. H. He d. Feb. 11, 1872. The following is copied from a "University of California Chronicle":

"Bartlett Doe, who was born in 1785, and who afterwards was a prominent Mason and a successful farmer, became a colonel in the second regiment of the Maine militia and raised a family of twelve children. By all accounts the Colonel was what used to be called a "very personable sort of a man." He was, according to the rather quaint words of the historian of Parsonsfield, "a man of high moral standing, a courteous gentleman of the old school, of a large, generous, loving nature, with every trait of genuine, robust and kindly humanity, and fully alive to every touch of true manliness. He believed in the development of every part of our nature, placing the foundation of excellence in deep religious principle, but not overlooking or underrating the claims of social and mental culture. When a young man, he was enrolled in the militia, where, displaying great military ca-capacity, he soon rose from the ranks to several grades of officers, and was finally commissioned as Colonel of the Second Regiment of Maine Militia. He was at that time of tall and commanding form, of fine proportions, broad shoulders and full chest; his features were regular and handsome, his voice clear and resounding, and when clad in his uniform and mounted upon his caparisoned steed made a most distinguished appearance."

"Uprightness, integrity, and natural ability—stern, capable, New England qualities—were the marks of the Doe men. They reached surely after the simple and substantial rewards of industry, and held them firmly. The Colonel's well-tilled acres and bursting granaries proved the sane, careful husbandman's thought behind all that bravery of the resounding voice and caparisoned steed!"

"The first period of his life, up to his migration to California, opens to us the spectacle of a persistently industrious spirit constantly dogged, constantly thwarted, in its various attempts by ill health. After a common school education at Parsonsville and some time at the Seminary at Drakes Corner, Effingham, just over the New Hampshire border, Doe began to make his own way as a school teacher at Parsonsfield. He was thrown entirely upon his own resources. Neither then, nor at any other time, did he receive aid from his family. Very soon the confined life of a teacher affected his health for the worse. Nothing daunted, he moved to Boston and learned the carpenter's trade. Characteristically, the man was snatching opportunity from misfortune; ill health necessitated an outdoor occupation; carpenter work was outdoor work, and carpenter work in Boston might lead a young and ambitious man up to contractor's work, and, beyond that to wholesale or retail commerce in building materials. But again ill health thwarted his plans. The air of Boston was not suited to his physical condition. Another change was necessary. For a short time he was employed in the post-office in Biddeford, Me., but only for a short time. Changing to Biddeford was not snatching opportunity from defeat,—was not the way of a Doe. If the change must be to a freer and wider air, that freer and wider air ought to be found in a land of new opportunity, in a land, young but growing to greatness, full of promise to the energetic and ambitious.

“In 1850, Bartlett Doe, his elder brother, had gone to California, and another brother, John, had followed two years later. There they had established, under the firm name of ‘B. and J. S. Doe’, a sash, door, and blind business which was to last half a century. To the delicate but ambitious brother the opportunity was obvious: California—square miles, cubic miles of fresh air—, a growing country—a lumber business! In 1857, Charles came to San Francisco and associated in business with his brothers. Doubtless his practical experience as a carpenter stood him in some stead in this wider business.

“Later he formed a partnership with James Knowland for the purpose of engaging in the retail lumber business. After a time this partnership was dissolved, and the business continued under the name of Charles F. Doe and Company. In these ventures the fortune of Charles Doe was made; in these ventures, and in investments made with their gains, thousands rolled up thousands, until the million mark was passed and repassed and passed again.

“The sickly boy had spent his years in the new country; he had nursed his health there, steadily and frugally; there, when he did business under the sign of Charles F. Doe and Company, he had achieved the vision of the Boston carpenter; and, by extending to that business the same qualities of foresight, frugality, indomitable perseverance, and successful management in the face of failure, which had brought him through the earlier years of his life, he had won a financial success that had put him, and kept him until his death in 1904, in the first rank of San Francisco capitalists. Even since his death the business he so wisely and carefully built up during his life has continued its success under the management of his nephew, Frank P. Doe.

“There was nothing spectacular about this success. There was no wild speculation in western bonanzas. A sanely, conservatively managed business in a profitable commodity brought in sure returns. The returns were loaned out at moderate interest, or invested in city real estate that invariably increased rapidly in value. Real values alone attracted Charles Doe's attention; there was in his business no commercial thievery by means of fictitious and inflated valuations—no making of fortunes by mere desk jugglery of pen and ink. Money earned money in a quiet, legitimate fashion; there was no buccaneering under the euphemistic cover of "astute financial operations." And this quiet, honest business—so good to reflect upon, so heartening in the midst of universal sensationalism and moral flippancy—was all conducted in San Francisco. There Charles Doe earned his money honestly, and there he invested it wisely,—a New Englander transplanted to San Francisco and not afraid or ashamed to live the stern, simple, placid life of the older and more staid community in the new and gayer and less conscientious metropolis. He was an argonaut who forgot not the lessons of his first home in the glamour of new opportunities.

"In California he came to man's estate. No picture of him is left to us. None is extant, save a daguerreotype taken just before he started for California. Temperamentally he was subject to an intense dislike of the camera—a subjection to which not a few modest, and perhaps over-serious people—not necessarily New Englanders—are quite painfully bound.

"In habits, Charles Doe was the personification of regularity. The daily routine of his life was seldom varied: stated hours for rising, for breakfast and his walk to the office, for attention to business, and for the other simple arrangements of each day's life. He belonged to no fraternal orders. His evenings were uniformly, year after year, spent at home—after 1888 at the homé he built for himself on the corner of California and Laguna streets, where his niece, Mrs. Martha A. Swan, kept house for him. He never travelled to any extent: he was never out of the United States. He had few intimates. Shy, retiring, delicate, he never mixed with his fellows. In that respect he was the opposite of his elder brother Bartlett, to whose quick, warm, positive nature the entire family, Charles included, looked for sympathy and advice. Especially in the presence of women, Charles Doe evinced a shyness that left him singularly without feminine companionship save that of the women of his own immediate family. Books were his companions. In them he found a quiet, leisurely, and faithful substitute for the more various and precarious companionship of men and women. And, characteristically, even in this friendship with books, a certain thoroughness and frugality showed itself; for he was not a light reader of many books, but a deep reader of a few. And the few were books richly remunerative in knowledge and common sense. Natural science and astronomy were his favorite subjects; Darwin, Huxley, and Spencer, the authors he read most. In religion he was a Universalist, looking out impartially and benevolently upon the variety of religious sects, seeing much good in all, and never allowing the narrowness of vision or smallness of nature often evinced by this or that sect to embitter his view of human character or its religious ideals. Under all changes and colors of creed he saw the one common human nature; and that human nature was truly beloved by the quiet, simple New Englander. His will is proof of that; Christian and Jew, Catholic and Protestant, benefit alike by the wise charities of that noble document. The list of his legacies includes, among others, such societies as the following: The San Francisco Protestant Orphan Asylum Society, the Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum and Home Society, The Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum, The Hospital for Children and Training School for Nurses, The Boys and Girls Aid Society, and The Golden Gate Kindergarten Association.

“In that list of legacies—all to societies dealing with the care of children—there seems to be a mute testimony of a deep affection going out from the heart of a lonely man to the children whom he could never know in the more loving way of a father. There is much peace and much love behind the bare terse law phrases in which the gifts are declared; just as behind the stern, simple lines of the donor’s New England countenance there was a deep, sure love for the peaceful ways of children. His kindness and generosity found expression during his life in the loving way in which, year by year, he entertained his relatives on the happy feast days of the calendar. About his table on holidays, especially on Thanksgiving Day and at Christmas, simply and joyously he gathered his kin. At such times the self-contained nature of the man seemed to his relatives, both old and young, like the benediction of one for whom the cares of the world had eventuated in a perfect and constrained peace, in a wise, calm, masterful reconciliation with his lot in life.

“But what was to be the final fruit of this quiet, strong life? So much financial success had come to the man that very great power was his. Was that power to dwindle at his death, accomplishing no perpetual monument of its own rise to greatness and of its own beneficent and wise, calm dealing with the hurly-burly of life? Was not the dignity of some public and perpetual usefulness to be the eventuation of so much private success? Of these things Charles Doe was not unmindful. He himself saw that private success, when it amounts to more than an individual sufficiency, involves a public duty. He often said that five hundred thousand dollars was enough for any one man, and that all wealth in excess of that amount should, on the owner's death revert to the state. Many were his quiet charities while alive; many, as we have seen, were his legacies to charitable institutions. But there yet remained the desire to do his own particular part, to perpetuate in some fashion the quiet, deep ways of his own manner of taking life, of his own springs of action and ideals. Many ideas suggested themselves.—About two years before his death, just after a severe illness, he had a new will drawn up on which he bequeathed to the regents of the University of California twenty-four per cent of his property, ‘in trust for the following purposes: As much as may be necessary thereof to be used in the construction and erection of a library building for its Academic Department, and the surplus not used for the construction and erection of a library building to be permanently invested by said Regents, and the income, revenue, and profit thereof to be used for the purchase of books.’

“Mr. Doe would have given much more had not the state code contained a provision limiting the percentage of fortune a man may bequeath to benevolent institutions.

“Such, then, — a University library building, capacious, invincible to weather and time, removed from the sensationalism of life, returning richly upon the investment in dividends of character and power—a perpetual monument to the will and industry and sure methods that had raised a private success to the measure of a public power, nobly discharging the public duty of that success—such, then, was the eventuation of the life that had begun quietly and sickly at Doe Mountain, had progressed frugally and gently through the East to the West, and had gone out from East and from West and from all else in the same uneventful fashion it had known in all the days of its doing on earth. A great Library—ministering always to the young and the courageous, to the hopeful and the makers of the future; ministering both by its calm, gracious, eternally stanch exterior, and also by the rich, deep hoards of human knowledge and wisdom stored safely in its interior; ministering for sanity, conservatism, truth, reverence and public and private responsibility; ministering out of the growing West to the reawakening East—like a modern Alexandria performing to the old civilizations of the past the reverence of a newer world power—such is the culmination of Charles Franklin Doe's life. The granite of the New England character and the granite of California mountains have found each other in a mutual symbolism of that which is honest and true from the core out.

"Of all that large family of brothers and sisters—twelve of them—to which Charles Doe belonged, only one, Mrs. Nancy H. Kezar, now remains; but California is proud of the name of Doe and all Californians will unite with Mrs. Kezar in being glad that the Doe name is perpetuated in this generous fashion.

"The life of many a man is called by his biographers uneventful. Charles Doe's life was uneventful. But, better understood, more deeply viewed, Charles Doe's life is the most eventful of all things—the growth of a great sane character day by day—more valuable to the nation than the drama of a conquering war hero—less obvious, more basal. The magnificent building at Berkeley symbolizes the solidity of achievement represented by such a character and so needed in the midst of our changing, kaleidoscopic national existence."

“He was a quiet man of simple tastes and orderly life. Diligent in business, he dealt honorably with all men. Charity for divergent views and a gentle tolerance toward the beliefs of others tempered the native sternness of his convictions. Shrinking from the social turmoil, he found through books abundant converse with the best who have thought and recorded; and now that he has yielded the stewardship of his goods, his last desire opens the companionships he loved to the use of all the recurring generations of the young.”

Rev. David Doe 5, (Nathaniel Jr. 4, Capt., Nathaniel 3, Sampson 2, Nicholas 1), b. Feb. 27, 1776, at Vassalboro, Me. Was a farmer and inventor. years ago last July. His bodily afflictions have been severe for some years, but he bore them with patience and Christian resignation. On Saturday evening he was attacked with a shock of paralysis—after which he remained in an unconscious state until Tuesday morning, when he fell asleep in Jesus. About one year since, Bro. D. was brought near to death, as all his friends supposed, and as we knelt by his bedside, he said: "Thy will, O Lord, be done," but his work on earth was not yet finished. Again his voice was heard in our conference and prayer meetings, and occasionally he attended public worship. His earnest prayers and entreaties, faithful warnings and exhortations, will not, cannot soon be forgotten in the church and community in which he lived. He leaves a deeply afflicted widow, several children, brothers, sisters, and a large circle of mourning friends."

(Biographical Sketch.)

Joseph Merrill Doe was born in Meredith, N. H., March 26, 1809, where the family for several generations had been located. His father was a farmer and he worked with him while attending school. Later he went to Lowell, Massachusetts, where he learned the trade of upholsterer, and then opened a furniture store with a Mr. Mason as a partner. On Sept. 29, 1834, he m. Laura Page, also of Meredith, bringing her to Lowell to live. In 1836 he removed to Boston and for many years his name was the only Doe in the Boston Directory. Here his business was again that of furniture, and in 1846 he organized the firm of Doe, Hazelton & Co., at the head of which he continued for many years, the business of the house gaining steadily until it became one of the best known in Boston.

In 1855 he sold out to his partners and moved to New York where he continued in the furniture business until the Civil War began. His trade was almost entirely with Southern dealers, and with the war came to an end. He then decided to return to New England, where with a Mr. John A. Ellis he continued the manufacture of furniture. Their factory was in Cambridge and the firm name was John A. Ellis & Co. Later, upon the death of Mr. Ellis, the firm became Doe & Hunnewell, which continued until Mr. Doe's death Aug. 2, 1871.

Thomas Doe 6, (Samuel 5, Lemuel 4, Lieut. Samuel 3, Sampson 2, Nicholas 1), b. Glenburn, Me., near Bangor, Me., Apr. 11, 1818; m. Apr. 23, 1851, Elizabeth Pilkington, who was b. in Providence, Ill. He spent his young manhood in the vicinity of Bangor, where he attended school and worked in the lumber camps up the Penobscot for a season occasionally to get funds for further schooling; from his own writing we note the following:

“Each of us made our own bed of tassels picked from the cedar, fir, hemlock, and pine boughs, thereby, making a healthy odoriferent couch. With a good cook we did justice to our supplies of pork and beans and relished the molasses—being so far from “clearing” as to render vegetables out of the question. We lived remote from refined society for nine months at a time until the spring freshet was sufficient to float the logs down the smaller streams to a lake or an outlet into the main river and then driven to the saw mills.” In one of the expeditions he accidentally chopped his foot very badly and was a sufferer all his life from the injured member. He completed a course of study at Foxcroft Academy, and soon after left his home and journeyed westward via the Erie Canal and Great Lakes to Chicago, which was only a swampy village. He took a stage from Chicago to Dixon and here he began his chosen work in 1845 and for many years was an instructor in the public schools of northern Illinois.

He was married to Elizabeth Pilkington at Providence, Ill., Apr. 23, 1854 and to this union nine children were born: dau Elizabeth, d. in infancy; 2nd dau. Abigail, d. soon after graduating from a Chicago College, age 25 years. After teaching many years he devoted his time entirely to farming and lived for 37 years on one farm that was but “raw prairie” when he and his noble wife took upon themselves the duty of developing it into a most fruitful and beautiful farm home. After all these years of scientific farming and stock raising he sold his farms in Ill. and again turned his face westward to once more pioneer in a new country and moved to Holdrege, Neb., where he was surrounded by his seven remaining children. He continued his life of activity and usefulness to his last illness, being a great student and a deep thinker, making use of the latin and algebra he had taught many years before, in helping many a student out of school. He never was a member of any church, but was a friend and helper of them all and very liberal and charitable in his every day life. He was always interested in the political affairs of his country and a staunch supporter of the Republican party. Mr. Doe held various offices in his precinct and served on the school board for many years as Pres. After a long and useful life, given to profound study and meditation on political, religious, ethical and educational problems along with the activities of farm management, were laid aside and after a brief illness, he died, as he had lived for 81 years, 4 mos., 3 days, full of courage and conviction that he was "willing to do as the Lord sees best" as he remarked just as his spirit was about to take its flight. He was buried in Prairie Home Cemetery, Holdrege, Neb., Aug. 15, 1899.

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

SUPERIOR COURT.

Dover, N. H., Dec. 9, 1916.

My dear Mr. Doe:

Your letter of the first inst. is only just at hand, I having been away at Nashua holding Court.

I am pleased that you find the memories of Judge Doe of interest, and so far as I am concerned, you are at liberty to use it in your work as you suggest.

With kind regards, I am

Truly yours,

ROBERT G. PIKE.

Elmer E. Doe, Esq.,

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BAR ASSOCIATION OF THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, 1916.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

By Robert G. Pike of Dover.

Memories of Judge Doe.

It is now twenty years since Judge Doe passed away, but the impetus and direction given by him to reform measures in the administration of justice have steadily gone forward,—seemingly as he would have wished had he been alive to observe. When it is considered what he accomplished by way of reform in judicial procedures and methods of proof in a little over a quarter of a century—all of which have come to us as a priceless heritage—we stand with uncovered head before the spirit of a man whose like is seen but seldom in the cycle of a century.

At this meeting measures that make for still further progress in this direction are to be considered, and this fact calls to mind this great pioneer in judicial reform, who fought great battles in the early years and blazed the way to a rational administration of the law. A recital and analysis of what Judge Doe accomplished in these respects, or as a profound expositor of the common law, is not within the scope of these remarks,—the time is too limited for such a task and the occasion does not require it. Brother Hening in an article of much merit has fully spoken of his work and told with force of his great and beneficent influence upon the jurisprudence of this and future generations; and Brother S. C. Eastman has written an interesting article on the subject from a different point of view. Nor shall I attempt a complete memoir of Judge Doe, for none more admirable could be written than the one by Judge Jeremiah Smith, delivered before this Association in 1897. But there are certain traits and characteristics; certain ways and methods of achieving ends; certain qualities and impulses that mark the inner man and the finer sensibilities of this great judge that I desire briefly to refer to. A consideration thereof gives us a better understanding—a clearer conception, of the human side of his nature, and throws light upon the purposes and objects to be attained by the great reforms that he inaugurated.

Charles Doe was born in Derry, N. H., April 11, 1830. "Early in his childhood the family returned to their former residence in Somersworth (now Rollinsford), N. H., and took up their abode in the old homestead of the Ricker family." The house was built in 1796 as an old-time inn by Ebenezer Ricker, the maternal grandfather of Judge Doe. It was a mansion of much dignity, the better type of the colonial country habitation. Dr. Timothy Dwight, former President of Yale, in his "Travels in New England and New York" (1821), speaks of stopping at Captain Ricker's as follows: "This gentleman (for he amply merits the title) had just buried his wife, and quitted the business of an Innkeeper. With some persuasion he consented, however, to lodge us; but with evident apprehensions that we should find less agreeable accommodations than we wished. The treatment which we received from him and all his was such as favorite friends might have expected from a hospitable and well bred family. I never found an Inn more agreeable."

After his graduation from Dartmouth College, in 1849, Charles Doe entered the office of Daniel M. Christie of Dover and began the study of law. Mr. Christie was a great lawyer in the strictest and best sense of the term. Not only was he learned in all that the books of the period had in store but he was a patient, thorough and constant worker, with a large and lucrative practice,—a man of the highest integrity and of great intellectual force. It was an ideal office for any young man to study in, and particularly so for one of the ability and genius of young Doe. That he made the most of his opportunities no question can arise. He at once, became immersed in an atmosphere of law and found that he was living in a very natural element. He had profound respect and admiration for his teacher and often spoke of him in terms of high approval. He told me that no student would have dared to read a newspaper in the office; that he never even saw one there. It was a place for serious, unremitting work, where the length of day was based upon no eight-hour plan, nor its ending upon the setting of the sun. He said that whenever Mr. Christie's advice was sought upon any point, no matter how plain it may have been, he gave no answer to the client at the time. The question was written down and the client told when he could call again. Mr. Christie's reason for this was that no haphazard answer should ever be given upon a point of law. The statute or authorities should carefully be looked up and examined before an opinion should be advanced. Besides, as Judge Doe said, he probably thought that a client would value advice more highly that was given after such careful examination than he would had it been given him in an offhand manner at the time.

He began the practice of law at Dover in 1854 and continued there until he was appointed to the bench, having the late Charles W. Woodman as a partner for much of the time. Soon after he opened office he received the appointment of County Solicitor which he held for two and one-half years. He had important criminal cases to consider and dispose of and he discharged such duties with courage and ability. He also had a good and steadily increasing practice in civil business. Between the time he opened office and his appointment to the bench,—a period of about five years,—he was entered of record as attorney in 223 different cases on the Strafford County docket. And some of them were of much importance,—cases wherein Daniel M. Christie and John P. Hale were lawyers on the opposing side. Had he continued in the ranks of the active practitioner it is interesting to consider what he might therein have accomplished. It is certain that he would have taken a high rank among the great trial lawyers of the country. Those of us who were fortunate enough to hear, at Concord, his masterful cross examination of Cook, for two hours, in a phase of the Buzzell murder trial, know something of his great abilities in this direction.

Judge Smith says: "Charles Doe, though loving the law for its own sake, was not wholly absorbed in the practice of his profession. He earnestly entered into politics. His father was one of the old war horses of the Democracy and the son naturally attached himself to the same party. He was Assistant Clerk of the State Senate in 1853 and 1854; and was active as a stump speaker in the excited campaigns which followed the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. All this time * * * he was looking forward to a legal future rather than to political distinction. Stump speaking was taken up to overcome the extreme bashfulness of his early years." Judge Doe told me, also, what is quoted above with the addition that he spoke in every school-house in the county, and as he dwelt upon the reminiscence he laughingly remarked that the first of those speeches were rather disconnected talks, but added that the experience did him a world of good in the confidence he gained thereby and the ability to think and express himself upon his feet. Apparently he continued to be a strong adherent of the Democratic party until the spring of 1859, at which time he became an active and ardent speaker for Republican principles. He prepared his speeches with much care, — not by writing them out in full, but by topics or head notes with clippings to illustrate. I recently saw a volume of speeches of the distinguished statesmen of the decade before the war which Judge Doe had had bound. On the inside of the first cover was the following written in his hand: "Upon the following authorities I founded stump speeches during the canvass for the State Election March, 1859." Within the volume were many loose narrow sheets upon each of which the topics of a speech were written and newspaper cuttings which were to be read and commented on when the proper time arrived.

Charles Doe was appointed an associate justice of the Supreme Judicial Court on September 23, 1859,—when he was only 29 years of age. He had then made his mark in the judicial world or such men as Daniel M. Christie and Gilman Marston would not have "strongly recommended his appointment." Judge Smith says: "At the start there was a strong political prejudice against him. This obstacle, if it had been the only one, he would soon have overcome by his immediate manifestation of ability and impartiality. But there were other causes of offense which alienated from him some lawyers who would naturally have been his closest friends. He was, from the very beginning, a reformer. He insisted upon having cases tried civilly, expeditiously and upon the merits. Some bar leaders were unwilling to change the habits of a lifetime at the bidding of a younger man. The result in certain counties was a somewhat stormy season, which would have induced the majority of new judges either to submit to the old regime or resign their office in despair. Not so with Judge Doe. He stood his ground and carried his main points." While I was a law student in his office he told me among many matters of the struggles that he underwent in bringing about the reforms referred to. He had seen in his five years' practice women and children and even men so controlled by the overbearing and coercing manner of some lawyers on cross examination, that in an effort to bring truth to light they brought falsehood in its stead. And he resolved, as did Abraham Lincoln when he witnessed for the first time the sale of slaves in the auction room at New Orleans, that if ever he got a chance to hit that practice he'd hit it hard. And this he did. Almost the first occasion he had to act in this direction was in a case where Mr. Christie, his old preceptor, was the offender. Mr. Christie was pursuing hard a timid witness who, under the spell of his great personality, seemed unable to express even a single thought. Judge Doe suggested that he try a milder and less vigorous style of questioning; but the habit of years was so engrafted in the great man's nature that it was hard for him to change. And when he resumed it was in the same commanding and demanding way. The Judge then mildly but firmly insisted that this style of cross examination must end. A hush fell over the court room in expectation of a conflict between the leader and the Court. Mr. Christie hesitated,—made no reply—sat down a moment, then arose and examined the witness in a manner most commendable. Judge

Doe, who told me of the incident, said that he was ever grateful to Mr. Christie for his generous conduct in submitting gracefully on this occasion, and he explained his yielding without a conflict upon the ground that Mr. Christie regarded him as one of his boys, and was anxious for him to succeed. The first victory in the great war for reform court procedure was therefore won.

Another episode of a similar character occurred in an encounter with General Gilman Marston of Exeter. The General, as all of us know, was a man at the very height of his profession, a most able lawyer, a strong advocate, but when angered or aroused he was a good man to let alone. He, like Mr. Christie, had recommended Judge Doe for the bench, and had a very high regard for the young man's talent. On one occasion at Exeter where the Judge was presiding the General was shaking his finger in a witness' face and pressing him beyond what the Judge thought was due and proper. Judge Doe suggested to the General that he refrain from the method he was using to elicit testimony and adopt a more conciliatory manner. But the General was not made to do business in that way. He muttered something to himself and charged upon the witness with redoubled violence. The Judge then turned to the witness and said: "Mr. Witness: You need not answer any more of the lawyer's questions until he asks them in a proper manner." The General glared at the Court a moment, swore audibly, gathered up his papers on the table with both arms and left the room. The noon hour of adjournment having arrived, an intermission was taken until 2 o'clock. The General had been in the habit of calling upon the Judge quite frequently on Sunday afternoons. When the latter left the court room he saw the General, with a cigar in his mouth which he was nervously chewing, walking up and down the corridor muttering to himself. The Judge walked up to him, placed his hand upon his shoulder and said: "General, are you coming over to see me Sunday?" "Not by a damned sight," was the General's instant answer. The Judge laughingly took his leave. The matter drifted along for several weeks when one Monday at dinner time the Judge knocked at the General's house and the door was opened by Mary, his faithful housekeeper. Interview:

Mary: "Oh, Judge Doe, I'm glad to see you; we have only pudding and milk for dinner or I'd ask you to come in."

Judge Doe: "Pudding and milk is my favorite dish, Mary. I think I must have some of it."

And pushing past the astonished housekeeper the Judge walked into the dining room where the General was disposing of a bowl of the happy combination, seated himself at the table by the side of his host, and said: "General, please pass the pudding and milk?" It was not long before the two great men were talking together as delightedly as two children who had "quarreled and made up." Mary was delighted to see them walking down to the General's office arm in arm. A little later in the day a local lawyer met the General and accosting him said: "How is it that you have made up with the Judge?" To which the General replied: "How in thunder can you keep mad with a man who walks into your house, uninvited, and asks you to pass the pudding and milk?" This incident not only marks another step forward in reform practice of the state, but it also shows what diplomacy the Judge possessed when he had anything difficult to accomplish. He would not allow the incident just related to annoy him, and he brought about the old delightful relations with the General that had existed before and which continued to exist between them until the General's death.

Judge Doe soon brought about other changes for the better in the simple matter of court practices or formalities. One of these was that of sheriff escorting the judge to and from the court house. Formerly it was necessary for the sheriff to carry a drawn sword, but a long time ago the sword part of the formality was abandoned, after which the sheriff, clothed in his own dignity, was sufficient for the judge's protection. But even this simple practice received its death knell early in Judge Doe's judicial career. It happened at Manchester when Daniel L. Stevens, a deputy sheriff, called at the Manchester House for escort duty. Whereupon something like this took place:

Judge Doe: "Hello, Dan. What are you here for?"

Mr. Stevens: "To escort Your Honor to the court room."

Judge Doe: "Don't bother about me, Dan. I'll be over in a little while. If folks see us together they'll say, 'What bounty jumper is Dan running in now?'"

And thus the old practice was never itself again. For some time thereafter an irregular attempt was made to escort other judges to the room, but the old formality at last was wholly abandoned. The Court now sees the sheriff for the first time in the term when he appears in the court room on the opening day.

Another of these practices, harmless enough in itself but a waste of time and totally useless except to furnish entertainment for the idlers on the spectators' seats, was the formal proclamation at the opening and the closing of every half-day session of the Court. The sheriffs rather liked to make the rafters ring with their sonorous "Hear ye, Hear ye, Hear ye. Come into court," &c., but the Judge had other business to attend to and did not care to listen to such declamations, stirring though they were. He therefore took intermissions or recesses rather than adjournments, and the only proclamations made therefor he made himself, which generally were very brief, as for instance, "Come in at two." At first the lack of these formalities made some of the lawyers,—particularly those from outside the state, feel that something had been overlooked, but the time saved by the omission of this ceremony seems now to be ample compensation for the loss. Some time after the change in this respect Lawyer Rice of Worcester was in the midst of a protracted argument in the court house at Keene. The hour of twelve had arrived and Judge Doe announcing in his quiet, rapid way, "Come in at two," slipped from the bench and immediately left the room. Rice, who had not heard the Judge nor noticed that he had left, continued with the talk whereupon Batch, the opposing lawyer, leaning over the table said: "Hadn't you better stop, Brother Rice? The Court has gone." "Gone,—gone where?" and looking around realized for the first time that the bench was vacant. Batch replied, "Why, gone to dinner,—the Court's adjourned." Rice asked, "When did it adjourn?" To which Batch answered, "Why, a minute ago." Rice then smilingly said to the jury that he thought he had better wait until the Judge returned, and later remarked to some of the lawyers that this was the quickest, quietest and most informal adjournment that he had ever seen.

Judge Doe believed that the time of the Court should be devoted to the court work without any unnecessary ceremony or delay. It was for the purpose of administering justice in a way that was speedy, inexpensive and certain, and he was impatient with anything that tended to the contrary.

On one occasion when he was about to open Court at Manchester he was inquired of by the sheriff what clergyman he should invite to offer prayer. The Judge replied that it didn't matter provided he would be brief,—remarking further that “too much valuable time of the court is oftentimes taken by long prayers.” The sheriff in his quest for the right type of clergyman met the Rev. Dr. Buckley of the Methodist Church and told him what was wanted, saying further that the quicker he earned his $2 fee the better it would please the Court. The Reverend said he thought he could satisfy the Court in this respect, and taking his place beside the Judge arose to his solemn duty. He said: “Oh Lord bless this court and bless these lawyers. Make them to feel that life is short, that time is precious and should not be wasted in empty declamation. For Christ's sake. Amen.” Judge Doe turned to Dr. Buckley and said: “That's a great prayer, a model prayer. It ought to be printed and preserved with the records of the court.”

After being appointed to the bench Judge Doe took up his residence at Portsmouth. He lived there until his marriage in 1865. While there he became acquainted with a learned but eccentric gentleman of the name of Elwin, a scholar of wide attainments, who could speak fluently in several languages. He was a very interesting man to meet, and beyond all else he prided himself on his ability to outwalk anyone in all the country round. His plan was to invite his victim to a walk and then strike out across the country until his companion would cry out: “Enough.” Judge Doe, who knew that he was being marked as a sacrifice, when the time should come, prepared himself for the conflict. He bought all kind of shoes until he found the proper pair and then practiced at early morn and after dark until he felt ready for the expected invitation. It came, and the pedestrians started off across the fields in the direction of Agamenticus. Judge Doe said Elwin would talk with great ability, and with a never failing flow of words, upon subjects very interesting, and this, too, as they walked over ploughed ground, through bushes and into wide streams where the water would reach far above their knees.

They reached Agamenticus in the afternoon and then struck off toward Cape Neddick. On reaching there at Elwin's suggestion they stopped at a house all night and in the morning retraced their steps to Portsmouth. Judge Doe took much pride in the fact that Elwin could not make him yield as he had expected him to do.

Upon his marriage he took up his residence in the home at Rollinsford where he had spent his youth. The house is spacious and is well preserved, dignified in its general appearance and furnished simply, with all the needs of comfort and high living. Large grounds surround it, wherein the Judge planted trees that soon grew to shade him in his walks, and gardens of rare excellence where vegetables, fruit and flowers grew in marked abundance. In a large front room, on the lower floor, where the sunlight poured into every corner, was the great man's study. From floor to ceiling, on every inch of wall, were law books that became his friends. And seated there in the quiet of his surroundings, with a genius rarely equalled for intense, mental labor, he worked out those immortal problems and results that have given us today the best working system of jurisprudence in the world, and wrote his name ineffaceably high up on the walls of fame.

In the spring of 1878 I entered his office as a student and remained there with him for about two years. I thereby had an opportunity of knowing him as he was in private life, and what were the methods of his daily work. His family relations were certainly ideal. Mrs. Doe was a woman of great intellectual endowment, delightful as a companion, and a helpmeet in the best and highest sense of the term. Ever solicitous for his welfare, she quietly and effectually aided him in every way toward the accomplishment of his great life work. She read the magazines, reviews and papers of the day and marked for his perusal those matters that she felt that he should know. It was a peaceful home and one best suited for the giving undivided thought to the problems he was called upon to solve.

In 1887 he and his son Perley went abroad, visiting Great Britain, France, The Netherlands and Belgium. For a long while he had cherished the thought of such a tour. At the time, he was much in need of change and rest. A serious illness in the spring, coming after a long period of his intense mental application, had brought him to a point where he was called upon to rest or break. The journey had for him much that was of benefit and pleasure. He visited the historic scenes and buildings in England and attended many of the sessions of the Court. All this, with his complete knowledge of the general and constitutional history of England and the history of the common law was a satisfying recreation.

Of special interest was his visit to the battlefield of Waterloo. He was thoroughly conversant with every point and part of that historic ground. He was a great admirer of the genius of the great captain who there met the defeat from which he never rose. I know of no more thorough and enthusiastic student of the Battle of Waterloo than was he. His knowledge of all the details of this great conflict was comprehensive and exact. I have recently examined one of his volumes upon the subject and found it full of interesting marginal notes upon the text. At several places the note was: "Improbable." At another where the author cast blame upon Grouchy for failing, as he claimed, to apprehend his mission in a certain instance Judge Doe had minuted: "All wrong. He did act intelligently in obeying orders, exactly, with what energy he had." And where in Wellington's memorandum it appears "that the allied British and Netherland army was in line at Quatre Bras," Judge Doe notes merely: "Horrible lie." The markings and comments that he made, all through the book, indicate a complete understanding of the moves or failure to move on the part of all the armies in that great struggle. When he came away he brought from the battlefield mementos that are still preserved. I have just seen a collection of wheat kernels that he gathered growing there.

Sometime after his return he was sitting at a trial at Manchester when Mr. Luce, the clerk, having heard that he had sent to General Marston a flower which he had gathered from the battlefield, asked him if he was interested in reading the accounts of Waterloo. Judge Doe said that he was and that he had read about everything that had been printed on the subject. Mr. Luce mentioned the account that Victor Hugo had written, in isolated chapters, in Les Miserables, but Judge Doe had not read nor heard of it. A copy was procured for him. He placed it just left of his note book on the bench and began to read. At times, brought back to the work at hand by "I object, Your Honor," he would instantly rule, sustaining or overruling the objection raised, and then his eyes would seek the page that they had left when he was interrupted. The short, crisp sentences and vivid portrayal of the subject by the great writer was such as keenly to awaken his interest, and each time, shortly after he began to read, he was thoroughly absorbed,—away on the great battlefield in Belgium.

Judge Doe, for many years, found it necessary to visit Boston to consult authorities in those larger libraries where the reports of every jurisdiction can be found. But the time came when the wearisome journey to and from, and the noise and confusion of the city became so irksome and distasteful to him that he looked for other means of gaining what he sought. Some years before he died he told me he was being relieved from the burden of these journeys,—that he had found a "wonderful young man" who was examining the authorities for him and sending him the result of his investigations. When, in 1904, I read the dedication of Professor Wigmore's unrivalled masterpiece on Evidence, "To the memory of the public services and the private friendship of two masters in the law of evidence, Charles Doe of New Hampshire, Judge and Reformer, and James Bradley Theyer of Massachusetts, Historian and Teacher," I wondered if the author of this great work was not the "wonderful young man" that Judge Doe, years before, had spoken of. And so it proved to be. Recently I wrote to Professor Wigmore, calling his attention to this dedication and stated that I was about to prepare the article I am now reading. I assured him that it would be of great interest to me and others to know something of the "Private Friendship" that existed between him and Judge Doe and to learn in what respect he considered him to have been a Reformer. He very courteously replied to my inquiries as follows:

Chicago, Ill.,

Mar. 27, 1916.

Dear Judge Pike:

Replying to your recent letters, I offer a few remarks about Judge Doe. I have, however, much less to tell than you might suppose. I follow your order of topics:

1. My "Private Friendship" with him. In the winter of '87 and '88, when I was just opening a law office, he sent down to Mr. Vaughan, librarian of the Social Law Library in Boston, for some one to collect authorities for him. The Court was several years behind, in its published reports, and in fact the opinions had never been written. Judge Doe had about 15 cases for his share of arrears, at least 15 which required special research. Mr. Vaughan recommended me; and I did the work during the ensuing years. I cast my results into the form of judicial opinions; and being much flattered by the task given me, I expected to be able to recognize my handiwork in the published opinions. But—I frankly admit that I never could find any resemblance at all between what I sent and what he turned out. Master mind that he was, my stuff was simply raw material to him, and he used it, or cast it out as he found fit. I had simply been a searcher, to him, and he made his own use of it in his own way.

And yet he found no fault with what I sent him. The enclosed letters testify that he obtained from me as much or more than he expected. But the letters are so personal that they will be of no use for your purpose. The last one, apropos of my intended departure for Japan, in 1889, to be professor of law, is however, a revelation of his direct common sense way of looking at things. I treasure it among my archives. It would be a good sermon for any young man.

2. I considered him a "reformer" in the sense that all judges ought to be but few judges are, viz.; in casting off the shackles of false precedent and revising unsound principles without impotently handing reform over to the legislature, as most judges feel obliged to do. His opinions in Darling vs. Westmoreland & State vs. Pike illustrate what I mean. He cleaned house of a lot of narrow rules which were threatening to fix themselves in the law and those opinions turned the tide all over the country. He measured a rule by its present good sense and sound principle; and he always could find some larger principle by which to straighten out the crooked angle in which the law had become temporarily lodged. And this is almost always feasible.

3. I never traced out his reforming principles outside of the Law of Evidence. I am told that he did the same thing for procedure in general. Hening has said something about that.

4. I called and still call him a "reformer" in the above sense, i. e., not in the legislative sense, but in the sense in which all supreme judges can be and ought to be, if they have the strong will and self confidence that he had, "possunt quia posse videntur". If all judges in their day and generation went about as he did, we should not now be in the helpless tangle which forces us to run to the incompetent legislature for every petty improvement.

I hope I have given you something that may help.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN H. WIGMORE.

A strange coincidence was that he fell dead on the railroad platform in '96 on the very morning on which we came, in our Torts class, to his celebrated opinion in the Mink case, and I was descanting to my class on the greatness of the writer of that opinion.

J. H. W.

P. S. You will see from the letters that I never met him personally. But his letters meant so much to me in my professional beginnings, by the encouragement which so warms a young man's heart, and they showed so kindly an interest, that I ever entertained a deep affection, and I took the occasion of my book's appearance to try to repay the debt publicly. His picture has for twenty years hung over my desk, daily before my eyes.

The letter of Judge Doe to Professor Wigmore on the latter's intended departure for Japan is a most illuminating one. A vein of sadness runs through it from first to last. His intense mental application and a period of illness, not long before, had impaired his physical powers, and had left its impress upon his mind. He wished to sound a warning of the dangers that lie in the pathway of ambitious men and to point out a way by which these dangers could be shunned. That portion, of especial interest, is as follows:

Salmon Falls, N. H.,

July 9, '89.

Bro. Wigmore: Your selection for the work in Japan is a strong testimonial of the quality of your work as a writer, & probably as a student at the law school & in college.

The greatest danger of men of your stamp generally is in overwork & a violation of the laws of health of which so few have any knowledge. It is not probable that you will reach the age of fifty with a sound constitution, or any vigor or power of endurance capable of accomplishing anything. You will damage your body in some way so as to make life a burden & probably bring it to an early close. You will be influenced by no caution on the subject. No such man ever heeds any warning but actual disability produced by excessive continuous labor & lack of exercise, sleep & regular hours.

I trust you will be fortunate in your companion. The wives of the present generation of professional men are generally, in one way or another (often in more than one), a heavy burden & incumbrance,—a drain upon the time, the attention, the comfort & the mental & financial strength of the unhappy victims. I know more than one able man whose success at the bar has been made impossible by domestic distraction, extravagance, folly & misery. A young woman of education and refinement, content with her lot & willing & able to be anything but a constant annoyance & inordinate expense to her husband, has become a rare bird.

I hope you will both begin right, with sensible notions of expenditure, contentment & harmony, & thus stand some chance of attaining that position of honor and independence to which your talents are entitled. A vulgar notion of display & an affectation of social rank, are besetting sins, so universal & so ruinous, that an old man fails in his duty when he neglects a fair opportunity to warn every young person who is worthy of a high place in the world. With due labor you are sure of fulfilling your ambition. Without an economical, unpretending, peaceable, quiet & happy home the necessary continuous, intense & undisturbed mental application is impossible. * * *

With the books he was consulting piled around him on chairs and tables, and the floor well covered by others resting on their edges, the Judge would sit at his study table and write for hours. At times he would lay down the pen and sit wrapped in thought until the idea he was seeking to evolve was clear, and then the writing would begin again. He worked quietly, rapidly and to the point. At intervals he would leave the study for his exercise,—for a walk down through the grove or to the village for his mail. Or he would go into the garden to direct the workmen in their duties. When he returned it was generally with an expression of satisfaction that the walk had cleared his head and that he was again ready for the affray.

He was a firm believer in a generous supply of good fresh air to breathe. In study and in sleeping rooms the windows were, at times, removed; and in the court room ventilation was the first thing that commanded his attention. He considered the taking of such provisions a vital need to those who were compelled to stay in court; and he believed that their requirements should be considered in preference to the wishes of those who were present from curiosity alone. Some few have regarded his ideas, in this respect, a subject for humorous comment or ridicule. But they did not understand. Judge Doe was a man who always sought to find the reason for an act, and in the finding, wrong practices and customs were often overthrown. We are all, now, coming to regard pure air as necessary for our proper living,—as seen by our sleeping porches and improved methods for ventilation. This, and every other course or practice concerning which the idle or the ignorant have criticized him for a departure from some established mode or custom, will be found resting solidly upon principles of good sound common sense, and not upon the silly notion or idea of those who feel that things ordained as fashion, are always right.

Whenever Judge Doe was tired or exhausted he went to bed whether it was the day time or the night. His retiring by day generally occurred, however, upon his return from the law term consultations, upon the arrival of the morning train. A few hours' sleep restored him to his normal state and then he would be ready to apply himself to the many questions that the meeting had brought up.

It was a delight to labor in his study under the inspiration of his presence. Whenever I asked him questions about principles, that seemed to me obscure, he would instantly lay aside his work and give such illuminating answers that the subjects would stand out clear without a question or a doubt remaining. These answers or explanations would be lectures, in effect, upon the principles of law involved. And often he would rest from his work at hand and give a talk on some important subject most helpful to a student who in time would practice law. I recall that one talk was on "Honesty,"—as a necessary asset of every lawyer. Another was on "Tact," and its importance to a lawyer if he would succeed. All of these talks made reference to different lawyers in the state and received force as their conduct illustrated the points he desired to bring out.

His children received their early education at home from private instructors. This education included not only the ordinary branches of the common school but also French and music. The text-books that were used in all the branches were the result of infinite investigation on the Judge's part, a vast number, by many authors, were examined and educators consulted with a view of procuring the most advanced and best system that could be had. No one ever bestowed more solicitude and effort for the right education of his children than Judge Doe bestowed on his.

I have heard him say that he didn't expect or want to see his children become musicians, but he believed the discipline of mind and muscles derived from being taught to sing and play was worth the effort and time put into this branch of their education. I do not think that he was a lover of music himself, although I understand he really owned and played a flute in his younger days. He told me that, on one occasion, he attended an opera. I don't know how it was that he happened to attend. It is sufficient that he did. He said he stood the performance pretty well until the prima donna reached a climax and gave out some high and piercing notes—a sweep into the very heavens—and then, he thought he should go wild. He actually had to put his fingers in his ears to shut out the sound and finally felt obliged to leave the house, which, at the time, was thundering with applause. He could see no sense or satisfaction in listening to such an exhibition, but he recalled this incident in his life with much amusement.

All kinds of persons called upon him at his study with missions too numerous and varied to enumerate. The man who showed that he was square and tried to do his best was sure to get, if not what he sought, help of a very useful and material kind. But with the man of pretence, the imposter, he had little patience; and a few crisp words would generally be sufficient to convince him that his measure had been taken and his scheme was understood. He loved to meet and talk with people in all the various walks of life; to get their point of view in looking at the fundamental questions of the day. He gained much profit and amusement from such interviews.

I used to think he could read one's character as quickly as anyone I ever knew. A look into the face, — a few inquiries, with answers given, and the measure of the man was taken. He would walk through a crowd of people turning neither to the right nor left and yet knew who was present and much of what was in their minds. I remember, once, of his calling a few minutes at a house where an old woman lived who had had much trouble and was badly broken. Neither knew who the other was but when he came away he said: "Poor woman, what disappointments she must have had!" The remark was very true and he had read it all in her wrinkled face and trembling voice.

People who did not know might have thought him to be cold and reticent but nothing could be farther from the truth. The latch string of his house was always out, and his friends were sure of receiving a cordial greeting at his hands. Sitting in his study or under the spreading branches of the trees that shaded his yard he would talk delightfully for hours at a time. He told a story well, and his listener's enjoyment of the tale was enhanced by the Judge's pleasure and inimitable manner in relating it.

He was kind and generous to everyone in need. The poor in the vicinity had much to thank him for in that he never failed to minister to their comfort and their happiness. Although many could not read the thoughts and emotions that were passing in the busy brain, behind the impenetrable mask of this great man's countenance, I know that he had one of the kindest hearts that ever beat in human breast.

And he was charitable withal. Condemned as he was, at times, by those who did not understand, he never lost his temper or showed enmity in return. He made no explanation of his acts, did not reply, and was not moved to change his course from that which duty pointed out. I remember once when he had spoken of the great ability of a certain man he added, half laughingly, "but he doesn't think much of me. He has threatened on the public streets to have me impeached." When I consider how serene, how grand he was under violent criticism and assault, he seems to have been like “ * * * some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,

Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm.

Tho round its breast the rolling clouds are spread Eternal sunshine settles on its head.”

In speaking of his charitable qualities I am reminded of many of his remarks that make allowances for the shortcoming of others. More than once I have heard him say when referring to some unfortunate man whose transgressions had brought him to his punishment: “Mr. Pike, suppose you and I had been born with the same inherited tendencies; brought up under the same vicious influences; with no more will power than he has, and subjected to the same temptation that he has been; do you suppose that we should come out of it any better than he has?” I doubt it.”

After Judge Doe took up his residence at Rollinsford he attended the Unitarian church at Dover with a reasonable degree of regularity. This church was the one out of which arose the celebrated case of Hale vs. Everett wherein he wrote a most exhaustive and elaborate opinion. In his later years he attended church but rarely—not that there was change in his religious belief, but because he needed the Sabbath for his mental and physical relaxation and rest. Whether it was because he was thus seldom seen at church or because of his avowed liberal utterances, the rumor got abroad that he was not orthodox in his belief,—that he was a freethinker. Undoubtedly this was what induced a committee of women from a Universalist church in a neighboring village to call upon him with a view of securing financial aid for their church and his attendance at its services. With a purpose to awaken his interest and enlist his sympathies they said to him: “Judge Doe, I believe you do not believe in Hell; we Universalists do not.” To which he replied: “Oh, you are mistaken. If there is anything I feel sure of it is that there is a Hell, and nothing is more certain than that we are punished for our sins.” The committee thereupon, much crestfallen, took their leave. The Judge was greatly amused at the incident and often related it with relish to his friends.

All of us were greatly shocked when learning of his sudden death. He was on his way to Concord to attend a sitting of the law term when it occurred. He had his satchel with him, filled with papers that bore upon questions to be discussed. Among them were the ones relating to the case of State vs. Gerry, wherein Judge Carpenter, and some associates, had taken the position that the statute out of which the case arose was unconstitutional and void; Judge Doe that it was not. There had been long and earnest arguments on the question raised, and as the Judge started on his fatal journey he felt ready for the final conflict. Only three days before he had said to an associate who held his view, while showing him a draft of a tentative opinion, "I'm going to convince those gentlemen that they are wrong." Poor man, he did not live to even meet with them again. The opinion in the case was handed down in June by a divided Court of 4 to 3; the statute was thereby held to be unconstitutional.

Judge Doe was buried beside his first born son in Rollinsford, on the bank of the Piscataqua. On a natural elevation covered by a growth of pines, and far away from human habitation is a large boulder, on the face of which is inscribed the one word, "Doe." One standing there may look through branches to the broad and silent river at his feet. It is a peaceful spot in which to rest for one whose life was constant labor. No sound breaks in upon it save the sighing of the wind, and the voicing of the birds, among the trees.

Brother Hening's final estimate of Judge Doe's influence and character is very fitting and I quote in part:

"To exaggerate his influence upon the jurisprudence of New Hampshire would probably be impossible. * * * To compare and contrast him with other great common law Judges in the Old and in the New England and other states of the American Union and finally to assign him to some imaginary niche between well known English or American Judges, would be a task as difficult for the writer as the result would be unsatisfactory to the reader. But if a comparison should be attempted, his peers must certainly be sought among those few who have profoundly revolutionized existing ideas of common law administration and of the law of evidence, who have guided us by historical researches to the birth of legal conceptions and have skilfully separated legal truth from the matrix of circumstance."

The following in regard to Capt. Alvah Doe is copied from the "History of Parsonsfield, Maine."

"He was educated at the common schools and at Ellingham Academy. His early years were passed on the homestead of his father, where he grew to manhood, surrounded by the refining influences of the home circle. He was of high moral culture, easy and agreeable manners, of pleasing social powers and prepossessing appearance, deservedly popular among his associates, and a general favorite among the masses. He had remarkable clearness of insight, the power of accurate observation and a keen, patient and discriminating judgment.

"In politics he was a democrat, and by his ability, shrewd, sagacious foresight and great popularity, soon became one of its acknowledged and trusted leaders. At the age of thirty-two he was honored by an election to the Legislature, and served for the years 1845 and 1846. In 1863 he was a member of the State Senate. He held various town offices acceptably to the people, and with honor and credit to himself. While enrolled in the militia he was elected as Captain of Company D., and later as Adjutant of Second Regiment of Infantry. He was one of the charter members of Charter Oak Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, at Effingham, N. H., and was greatly interested in all matters pertaining to the welfare and prosperity of the lodge, and was chosen as Master for four years. After a long and tedious illness he expired on the 4th day of July, 1885."

Frank Edwin Doe, a native of Newmarket, died at his home, 83 Thacher street, Milton, Mass., August 2, of pernicious anemia, aged 63 years and 8 months. He was the son of Andrew J. and Ann M. (Winkley) Doe, his ancestors being among the first settlers of the town. After disposing of the old homestead on the North Side, he went to Durham to live, going from there to Milton, Mass., about five years ago, where he purchased a home.

Mr. Doe was a long time member of the Free Baptist church of this town and was an earnest and faithful worker for the society. He was kind hearted, genial and had a strong personality, making friends wherever he went. He was a member of Rising Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M. of Newmarket. Mr. Doe had been in poor health since the first of the year, but had got better and was able to be around and work about his home until the Sunday before his death, when the intense heat overcame him, reaction of the heart set in and he remained in a stupor until his death early Thursday morning.

Funeral services were held at his late home in Milton, on Friday afternoon, and were largely attended by the host of friends he had made during his short sojourn in that town. There was a profusion of beautiful flowers.

Clark, Dec. 28, 1889, who was b. Rockland, Me. (The following article was copied from a Bangor paper): "With educational improvement in view, and better equipped young men and women for business life, the Doe Business College, established Sept.

24, 1900, has done much to attain its standard and be of public service and utility. A complete business education is given here, practical and every day examples of modern commercial life being applied to the rules of study, and all methods in accounts, banking, and negotiating, are practiced with unfailing conventionalty. Shorthand and typewriting are special studies, and pupils in these are impressed and taught, if necessary, the importance of correct spelling, punctuation and rhetoric. Several capable assistants are employed, and five conveniently furnished and well lighted rooms are occupied in the Y. M. C. A. building, which location was taken last year. The school's new location and facilities in the Y. M. C. A. Building have assisted greatly in its development and progress, and new pupils are constantly applying and being registered, encouraging the belief that the attendance will be exceptionally large another season. Mr. H. N. Doe, the Principal, was borne in Maine, educated in our public schools, and the Castine Normal School. He was a teacher for years in the public schools, his department being the commercial branches, shorthand and typewriting. He has been in our city 12 years, and is considered an influential factor in educational circles, a business man and citizen of esteem."
